Adopting Pets

Have you always dreamed of having a cuddly little pet become a part of your family? There's no reason not to turn that dream into a reality through pet adoption!

Below you'll find invaluable information on pet adoption and if this option is right for you.

Most commonly, people look to animal shelters and rescue groups for adoption options. For those who prefer browsing the web, online pet adoption is also available. To find your furry friend online today, you can start your search with these two popular websites: Petfinder.org and Adopt-a-Pet.com

If you're interested in adoption, here are some questions to consider:

- Do you have any other pets and how will they react to a new pet?
- Is your current residence suited to the pet you're considering?
- How will your social life or work obligations affect your ability to care for a pet?
- Do you have a plan for your new pet during vacations and/or work travel?
- How do the people you live with feel about having a pet in the house?
- Are you (or your spouse, partner or roommate) intolerant of hair, dirt and other realities of sharing your home with a pet, such as allergies?
- Do you or any of your household/family members have health issues that may be affected by a pet?
- What breed, or species, of animal is the best fit with your current lifestyle? (You can find information on specific breeds in our dog breed directory and cat breed directory.)
- Is there tension in the home? Pets quickly pick up on stress in the home, and it can exacerbate their health and behavior problems.
- Is there an adult in the family who has agreed to be ultimately responsible for the pet's care?
- What do you expect your pet to contribute to your life? For example, do you want a running and hiking buddy, or is your idea of exercise watching it on TV?
- If you are thinking of adopting a young animal, do you have the time and patience to work with the pet through its adolescence, taking house-breaking, chewing and energy-level into account?
- Have you considered your lifestyle carefully and determined whether a younger or older animal would be a better match for you?
- Can you train and handle a pet with behavior issues or are you looking for an easy-going friend?
- Do you need a pet who will be reliable with children or one you can take with

- when you travel?
- Do you want a pet who follows you all around the house or would you prefer a less clingy, more independent character?

Size Considerations (for Dogs):

- What size dog can your home accommodate?
- Will you have enough room if your dog grows to be bigger than expected?
- What size pet would suit the other people who live in or visit your home regularly?
- Do you have another pet to consider when choosing the size of your next pet?
- How big a pet can you travel comfortably with?

Pet Costs:

- More likely than not, the adopting agency will charge a fee to help defray the cost of taking in unwanted or lost animals. The adoption fee you pay will be a tiny fraction of the money you will spend over the life of your pet.
- You may need to pay for your adopted pet to be spayed or neutered before bringing him or her home.
- Some expenses are mandatory for all pets, including:
 - Food
 - Routine veterinary care
 - Licensing according to local regulations
 - Collars, leashes and identification tags
 - Kitty litter and box
 - Basic grooming equipment and supplies.
- Other expenditures may not be required but are highly recommended:
 - Permanent identification, such as a microchip or tattoo
 - Training classes
 - Additional grooming supplies or professional grooming (depending on your new pet's needs)
 - A spare collar or leash
 - A bed and toys
 - A crate or carrier
- Unexpected costs: Accidents and illness can result in costly emergency veterinary care. Recovery tools for finding a missing pet can include posters and rewards.
- A pet with special physical or behavioral challenges may require specialized professional support to overcome any obstacles these issues present.

Time Considerations:

- Pets need to be fed two to three times a day, more often in the case of puppies, and need a constant supply of fresh water.
- A responsible pet parent should spend at least one hour per day giving direct attention to his or her pet. This may include training, exercising, grooming, and playing or, with cats, maybe just lap time on the couch. Dogs will need to be taken out to potty several times a day.
- A pet with an abundance of energy needs more time to exercise and interactive toys to keep them entertained.
- Pets with long coats need 20 minutes a day of grooming to prevent matting.
- Pets with certain medical conditions may need additional attention, including specifically timed injections in the case of diabetic animals.
- Remember that adopted pets may need additional bonding and reassurance time in the early weeks.

If you believe that pet adoption is right for you, don't hesitate to visit your local animal shelter or rescue group! Pets are more than animals; they become your best companion, and there's nothing more fulfilling than growing your family.
